

THE TIMES

Matt Addis is as genially digressive as Jones as he is handsomely likeable as Palin

THE LIST

Absolutely hilarious... the cast of four are spot on with their impersonations in a show that really captures the anarchic spirit of its subject

FREE METRO

All four actors are a delight... very, very funny

STAGE! MUST SEE ★

The production deserves to tour and tour - and ideally with this cast... It is thrilling to see such eclectic talent assembled on one stage in a way we have rarely seen since, well, the Python Golden Age

PYTHONESQUE

by Roy Smiles, Directed by Michael Kingsbury

Review extracts from Edinburgh Fringe run, August 2009

The UK comedy guide

Chortle

Matt Addis is brilliant as the amiable Terry Jones

THE SCOTSMAN

The performances are jaw-droppingly good.

Matt Addis as both Michael Palin - "a man enraged by his own decency" - and a fabulously digressive Terry Jones seems to gain weight and lose stature whenever he transmogrifies from the former to the latter.

Each of these performances is worth the ticket price alone.

THE INDEPENDENT

The cast all have fine talents for mimicry